SUMMARY COMMENTS

- $750 million investment by OMERS de-risks financing of Westar acquisition
 - Mandatory convertible preferred stock to receive 100% equity treatment from the rating agencies
 - Long-dated capital commitment with terms locked-in at signing of M&A transaction
 - Issuance contingent on closing of the M&A transaction; will fund concurrently with M&A close
 - Reduces amount of equity capital to be raised in public financing markets
- Accounted for using “if converted” method, based on the more dilutive of either treatment as preferred stock or on an as converted basis
 - Increase of common shares at conversion in 2020 (based on expected issuance in 2017) to be offset by extinguishment of preferred dividend
 - As a result, while there will be additional shares of common stock outstanding following conversion, will not be dilutive to EPS relative to the impact of the instrument while outstanding
- As part of our total financing for the Westar acquisition, we plan on issuing to the public markets a mix of common stock and additional mandatory convertible preferred stock
 - Mandatory convertible preferred stock will have the same structure as the security issued to OMERS and will have the same accounting and credit agency treatment
 - Pricing terms will be based on market conditions and GXP share price at the time of issuance
 - Through the embedded conversion rate formula, a mandatory convertible preferred allows GXP to issue fewer shares as our share price increases over the next three years.
